The study of political phenomena has attracted scholars from different disciplines (such as comparative politics, political economy, political sociology and political communication), who approach intertwined questions from distinct perspectives. The resulting discourses, however, rarely engage with each other, while a comprehensive understanding of politics requires the joint application of diverse theoretical and methodological approaches, as well as syntheses of their results. This year’s instalment of our graduate conference, organised for the fifth time, aims to promote joint discourse and reflection by providing a forum for doctoral candidates and (post)graduate students engaged in political research.

Languages of the conference: Hungarian and English

Academic partners: Corvinus University of Budapest Doctoral Schools, HAS CSS Institute for Political Science, Hungarian Political Science Association

The Institute for Political Science of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences intends to honour the best English or Hungarian presentation of the conference. The Institute aims to highlight the importance of accurate and accessible scientific dissemination practices, motivating early career researchers to hone their skills in presenting their scientific results. The best presentation is selected by a committee nominated by the leaders of HAS Institute for Political Science and CUB Doctoral School of Political Science, based on session chairs’ recommendations. It is expected of those applying for the award to commit to publishing their manuscript in Intersections. East European Journal of Society and Politics or another social science journal of the HAS. The winner is awarded a gross prize of HUF 100.000.

Workshop A - Research Methods for Elite Studies (in English)

[5th floor 510, dean's conference room]

Instructor: Luca Kristóf (CSS Institute for Sociology)

“The workshop will cover the methodological opportunities and challenges of studying political elites. Starting with some basic principles of social science research, we will review and compare the advantages and disadvantages of quantitative and qualitative methods used in elite studies, such as SNA, archival research (text analysis), opinion survey and case study analysis. However, the workshop will focus on field methods (methods based on interactions between the researcher and members of the elite). Techniques used in the study of hard-to-reach social groups will be discussed. More specifically, we focus on problems of elite identification and operationalisation; probability and non-probability sampling methods; the challenges of unit- and item non-response; elite defensivity and the positionality of the researcher. Participants will be asked to design their own elite research (either quantitative, qualitative or mixed), working in groups, and formulate a research plan of 3-4000 words/group to be sent to me after the workshop for evaluation.”

[6th floor, room 656]

Instructor: Miklós Sebők (CSS, Institute for Political Science)

“The aim of this short course is to provide an introduction into the theory and practice of text mining in the social sciences. The course schedule comprises three 90 minuted sessions which cover the basics of the theory of text as data as well as a minimalist selection of text mining techniques. The focus is on the latter: we employ the most prevalent text mining packages in R in order to solve a limited set of challenges. Course prerequisites include a working level of English and all participants should bring a laptop with the latest versions of R and R studio installed”

Workshop C - Closer to the people? The content and effects of populist political communication
(in English)

[2nd floor, room 202]

Instructor: Desirée Schmuck (Ludwig Maximilian University of Munich)

“Populism has gained momentum all around the globe. The success enjoyed by populist politicians raises questions about the specific communication strategies and stylistic elements employed in populist political communication as well as the specific contextual structures, which may provide a breeding ground for the success of populist political communication. The PhD workshop will deal with the content of populist communication in light of discursive framing and stylistic elements. Furthermore, the workshop will address the effects of populist messages communicated by politicians on citizens’ attitudes and electoral behaviour and will also take into account the phenomenon of attitude polarization as a result of populist political communication.”
